Stay Safe During The Summer

Three weeks to go until the deadline (23rd July) of University of Greenwich's 'Trading Places' short story and collage competition! The theme of the competition is 'What is Work?'.

This year, there are two ways for you to enter. You can either write a short story or design a poster/collage inspired by the range of 19th century magazines and materials on the BLT19 website.

At the University of Greenwich, we are fascinated by the origins of how we think about work, because by understanding our history we can imagine and perhaps work towards new ways of working. Both competitions have three prizes to be won. That's a total of 12 prizes in all!

- 1st – £100 in vouchers
- 2nd – £75 in vouchers
- 3rd – £50 in vouchers

Full competition details are available on the BLT19 website and the University of Greenwich website. Professor Andrew King, who runs the BLT19 project, has made two videos on YouTube about the competition. The first is a short competition video with the basic details, and the second is a longer competition video which provides more detail about what type of short story and poster/collage we are looking for. Both can be found on the website. The 2020 competition winners' stories are available here if you want to get some ideas about what to write.

If you have any questions or need further guidance about the competition, please get in touch with us at blt19@gre.ac.uk.
